Refined design

Elegant and urbane, this garden transformation is a design triumph

There is a seductive quality to this backyard renovation in Glen Iris, Melbourne. The outcome of both sophisticated design and specialised construction, it amply proves you don't need an abundance of space to create impact.

Credit for the success of this stunning transformation goes to Daniel Tyrrell Landscapes, working hand-in-hand with Out From The Blue to produce a result that far surpassed the client's expectations.

The brief from the client was for a user-friendly space that would accommodate the needs of a growing family, be equally suitable for day-and night-time entertaining and would better integrate the existing, somewhat awkwardly shaped pool into the landscape.

A series of planters, level changes and seating add interest to the large wraparound timber deck that leads from the house into a garden that offers depth, colour and texture.

No longer does the pool claim centre stage. The frameless glass fencing allows the eye to skim over the surface of the pool and straight to the rear screens. These boldly architectural structures add depth and colour while blocking the view of the neighbouring property and an unsightly shed.

The soft, sophisticated colouring of the granite and bluestone paving helps to blend the pool into the new-look landscape while a clever granite platform leads to a raised deck positioned to take advantage of the morning sun and afternoon shade.
